Local teachers to protest pay as legislature opens

By COLLIN OVERTON
Courier staff writer

More than 75 teachers from Madison and Southwestern schools so far have signed up to join the rally for higher pay in Indianapolis Nov. 19.

A lack of increases in public school funding and teacher salaries has led the Indiana State Teachers Association and the American Federation of Teachers Indiana to organize a protest at the Statehouse on the first day of the legislative session.

So many teachers are taking off to attend that nearly 30 districts across the state have canceled school or scheduled e-learning days, including Indianapolis, South Bend and Wayne Township, a ChalkBeat story reports.

Madison Consolidated Schools has already scheduled an e-learning day in anticipation, said Diana Wehner, Madison's ISTA representative and a special education teacher at Anderson Elementary. More than 55 educators have signed up to go.

"They feel like they're not being treated as professionals anymore, like their voices are falling on deaf ears," Wehner said. Teachers not going to the capital on Nov. 19 will stick around at the schools and hold down the fort, she said.

At Southwestern, more than 20 teachers are expected to attend, said Brandon Frye, the district's ISTA representative and a business teacher at the high school. The Southwestern Board of Education will discuss what course to take at its meeting Monday.

"I would have to say teachers are feeling beat down and not respected by legislators," Frye said. It's a tough situation right now to go into the profession as well just because you know that those types of things are not respected, and opinions aren't necessarily asked or listened to as well, on the state level."

Teacher pay was the point of discussion at Wednesday night's special board meeting at Southwestern Elementary. Education attorney Emma Jay read the district's collective bargaining agreement for 2020, which grants all 79 teachers a $683 additional stipend. The stipend was originally advertised as $750 for 72 teachers, but the district decided to include new hires in the $54,000 overall allocation, Frye said.

After the agreement was read, teacher Karla Thornton asked the board to continue looking into cost savings. She was one of several teachers wearing crimson "#RedforEd" T-shirts paid for by Southwestern's teachers union, the Southwestern Classroom Teacher's Association, and worn by educators every other Wednesday.

"We really need to think creatively. We are bringing in people making more than the current teachers here, and that's causing morale to really fall. We're losing teachers because they're going to nearby districts, travel 10 minutes and make $3,000 more, $5,000 more," Thornton said.

Every Day's Veterans Day

Legion provides brotherhood for local veterans

By MARK CAMPBELL
Courier staff writer

The Veterans Day holiday on Monday provides pause to recognize, honor and thank the millions of veterans who have served our nation for generations.

And while the annual observance stands as a much-appreciated tribute to those who answered their nation's call to service — especially veterans who maybe returned home with little fanfare or appreciation — every day is Veterans Day at the Maj. Samuel Woodfill American Legion Post No. 9 in downtown Madison.

Just about any day of the week you can find a couple dozen veterans scattered around the Legion's bar and tables, enjoying a drink or a sandwich, but mostly just the brotherhood and camaraderie of fellow veterans. It's a support system that some need more than others, but one that all seem to appreciate.

"It's the camaraderie with our fellow vets and the American Legion," said Joe Kimmel, who saw action in the U.S. Navy during Vietnam.

"It's a brotherhood here," added Tony Grubbs, a U.S. Army veteran who served during the highly volatile Cuban Missile Crisis back in 1962.

Grubbs, now in his 70s, and George Dahlem, who is in his 80s and a former Navy Seabee who served in Cuba, said the community's attitude toward veterans of their era has always been pretty good, while Kimmel said it took some time for some people to appreciate and respect what he and other Vietnam vets went through both in service and upon returning home.

"The Vietnam veterans were chastised throughout their lives. When we came home, I had one person tell me they should have invested in Russian bonds. It was a really tough time back then," Kimmel said. "It's so much better now."

In fact, in addition to a national Veterans Day holiday, there will be numerous events Monday to recognize and honor veterans, including several school programs and another at the Indiana Veterans Memorial Cemetery on Madison's hilltop.

The Legion's Honor Guard, which is led by Grubbs, will be at the cemetery for a program starting rain or shine at the symbolic hour of 11 a.m. Armistice Day, which marked the end of World War I on the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month in 1918, later became Veteran's Day to honor and recognize all veterans.

Kimmel said Veterans Day programs — and some of the interaction that takes place as part of that — have helped ease old wounds and having friendly places like the Legion makes sure veterans have a place to feel appreciated every day.

Lack of shelters leaves homeless no relief from cold

By MARGARET HILLERY
Courier staff writer

It was in the low 20s Thursday night and is expected to be even colder some nights next week.

But, for the first time in many years, there is not expected to be an overnight warming shelter at The Salvation Army offices, or, at the moment, anywhere else in the area.

Dave Adams, a Madison volunteer who works on various initiatives to help veterans and the homeless, said he already has received calls from people on the streets without shelter asking where shelter might be available as winter temperatures begin.

After several years of providing what are known as overnight warming stations, the Salvation Army has found itself in a position where it is unable to open its doors as a shelter right now. Lt. Justin Hartley, who heads the Army office here, said the organization still is working with its headquarters to set up in the future for emergency shelter from the cold, but a plan is not ready now and he does not know when it might be.

The loss of the Salvation Army warming station, which opened in previous years when temperatures dropped below 32 degrees before 4 p.m., caught both city and county officials by surprise.

Troy Morgan, the Emergency Management Agency director for Jefferson County, took the issue before the county commission meeting Thursday

OVEC lists plans for toxic runoff

By PEGGY VLEREBOME
Special to the Courier

Two options for dealing with a trace element in groundwater near a pond at the Clifty Creek power plant were detailed for the public at an open house Thursday evening, along with greater explanation of the role and history of the pond than was in a written report filed in September.

The pond, named the Landfill Runoff Collection Pond, is mainly a rainfall-runoff pond where about 500 acres drain, one of the presenters from Ohio Valley Electric Corp. said. Some of the drainage also comes from a power plant landfill that is no longer used, he said, adding that the molybdenum is not coming from the landfill. The drainage area also gets runoff from steep hills, he said.

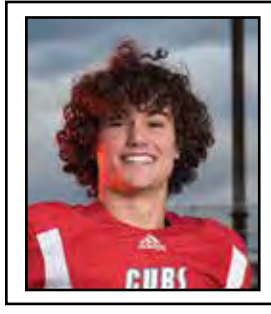

All of those could be reasons that an increase in the amount of the trace element molybdenum was found during regular monitoring a year and a half ago, the presenters from OVEC said. OVEC is the parent company of Indiana Kentucky Electric Corp.'s Clifty Creek power plant in Madison.

Molybdenum occurs naturally in nature and in small amounts is not a hazard, but large amounts can be toxic to people and to animals. Plants need molybdenum to grow, and it has industrial uses.

None of the molybdenum has gotten into the Ohio River and it is not a threat to public and private water wells, the presenters said.

The Landfill Runoff Collection Pond is on top of a former site for disposal

Groups work to raise awareness, lower veteran suicide rate

By LISA GILLESPIE
Side Effects Public Media

LOUISVILLE — In 2011, Alex Randolph was in Iraq in the middle of a tour of duty with the Army. One night, as he and his team slowly drove down dusty streets in a tank-like military vehicle, a few kids emerged from a house holding guns.

The soldiers cautiously watched the kids, who ranged in age from about 8 to 12.

Then, one child started shooting.

"We ended up taking the lives of some kids," recalled Randolph, a Louisville resident. "We had to — it was either our life or their life. When you have an 8, 10, 12-year-old child pointing an AK, pointing a weapon at you, and you're looking straight at it, you have a split-second reaction."

Intellectually, he knows why he did it.

"Am I going to give them a chance to shoot me and take my life?" Randolph said. "Or shoot one of my brothers or sisters and take their lives? Or am I going to take that shot and take them out?"

But emotionally, he questioned that decision for years. When he went home with a medical discharge, he felt like a casualty of war. His friends back home called him a monster, he said. For years, he struggled with post-traumatic stress disorder from living through that night and from seeing fellow soldiers die.

Randolph's thoughts led him into a downward spiral, and he felt suicide was the only answer.

That experience isn't uncommon for veterans. Veterans are much more likely to kill themselves than people who've never served, and nearly 17 veterans nationwide die by suicide every day.

"I don't think veteran suicide is a new phenomena," said Sherman Gillums, AMVETS Chief Advocacy Officer Sherman Gillums. "I do think what's changed is our awareness because information is more free-flowing and the experiences of service members and veterans is more visible."

That awareness worked in Randolph's favor. He knew he had to get help, so one day in 2017, he posted an SOS on the Veteran's Club Facebook page. Iraq War veteran and executive director of the social club Jeremy Harrell created the group to rebuild the connection that's lost when service members leave the military.

"Jeremy is the reason why I'm still here," Randolph said. "Because, at that point, I was ready to just end everything."

In the few years since Harrell started getting a small group of vets together, the group has grown to some 2,000 members across Kentucky. In that time, he has fielded many calls from suicidal vets and their family members. He said he draws from his own experiences with suicidal thoughts and training he's received on suicide prevention.

"I've had conversations — sometimes four or five hours — in an effort to try to get them ready to go get some help, and I hate to use the phrase 'talk them off the ledge,' but to do that," he said.

Harrell also helps connect the vets to counseling at the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs. That's a solution Randolph had sought when he was struggling in 2017, but he said he was told there was a six-to-eight-week wait.

That response felt like a slap in the face.

"Then what the hell are ya'll even here for?" Randolph said. "Why should I bother trying to go through ya'll to get help? I've waited long enough. Now you're telling me I've got to wait two, three, four, six weeks to get the help I'm asking for? You know, I may not be here."

Harrell, though, has connections with the Robley Rex VA Medical Center in Louisville. He got Randolph in to see a counselor the next day.

Robley Rex officials said there have been changes since Randolph was told he'd have to wait for an appointment. Louisville VA Suicide Prevention Coordinator Kelly Marcum said it now offers same-day mental health appointments.

"If you need to go in on that day to see someone, but it's not an emergency issue, you just need to talk to somebody because you have some kind of issue (and) you're not feeling an immediate danger to harm yourself or others, you can get at least an assessment with some mental health clinic staff," Marcum said.

Marcum also said the hospital is working on other projects to prevent veteran suicide.

Since July, the Louisville VA has distributed more than 2,000 gun locks to vets. Marcum said even a few minutes to unlock a gun could save a life — there's usually a five-minute window when a person is actively attempting suicide. In 2016 in Kentucky, 3/4 of suicides by veterans were carried out using a firearm, according to the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs.

There are also efforts to better educate families of veterans.

Gillum said AMVETS is trying to teach families about signs that indicate a veteran is struggling and might be considering suicide. It recently started offering a suicide prevention online curriculum geared toward families.

"It's the families, the people that are the first-line witness to what's happening, that don't know what they're seeing," Gillum said. "The veteran is reacting to a lack of support and a lack of understanding of what's happening."

The Veteran's Club Facebook page is full of people who are willing to help. On a recent evening, 15 people offered to pick up a vet who said he was having suicidal thoughts and was drinking heavily at a bar. Randolph was one of those people.

"When I start seeing fellow brothers and sisters comment and post if they need help — somebody reached out to me and gave me a hand and led me," Randolph said. "Now it's my turn to pay it forward and reach out."

Veterans who are in crisis or having thoughts of suicide, and those who know a veteran in crisis, can call the Veterans Crisis Line at 800-273-8255 or text 838255.

Gary council president charged with kidnapping teenager

By GRANT MORGAN
(Merrillville) Post-Tribune

Gary Common Council President Ronald Brewer faces charges of kidnapping, criminal confinement and intimidation for his alleged role in taking a teen at gunpoint from East Chicago to Gary.

The charges, all felonies, were filed Thursday afternoon in Lake County Superior Court, two days after Brewer won re-election to the Common Council. Online court records show a warrant has been issued for Brewer's arrest, with an initial bail of $50,000.

About 7:15 p.m. Sept. 22, according to a probable cause affidavit, East Chicago police officers responded to reports of a stolen vehicle near 145th Street and Indianapolis Boulevard.

The vehicle was later identified as a red Lexus that belonged to Brewer, which was stolen outside a Gary gas station the previous day when Brewer left the keys in the vehicle, police said.

Brewer, along with his wife, allegedly used a GPS system to track the vehicle to East Chicago Sept. 22, police have said.

Upon arriving, officers could not find the Brewers or the stolen vehicle, but arrested a 16-year-old who was alleged to have fled from the stolen car along with several others, according to court documents.

Two teens told police they fled the Lexus after the Brewers caught up to them in their SUV, the affidavit states.

One, the 14-year-old whom Brewer, 44, allegedly kidnapped, said he and several others were cruising in the Lexus when a "vehicle came up fast behind them like it wanted to ram" and a chase ensued, a probable cause affidavit said.

The driver of the pursuing vehicle, allegedly Brewer, "had his arm out the window firing" at least one shot, the teen told police, according to court documents.

Responding officers also saw three gunshots detected on their "Shot-Spotter" alert system as they drove to the scene, according to the affidavit.

Allegedly firing more shots after the teens fled the vehicle, Brewer caught the 14-year-old boy and took him back to Gary at gunpoint in the Lexus, the affidavit states.

Transcripts of a 911 call that was left on during the incident allege Brewer told the teen he was "thinking about popping the (expletive) out of your (expletive)" as he drove the juvenile from East Chicago to Gary, documents said.

The teen repeatedly denied knowing the vehicle was stolen, according to the affidavit, and at one point said, "Please don't kill me, man."

"You're a dead (expletive), that's what I'm talking about," Brewer said, according to the affidavit.

Officers were dispatched later that evening to Brewer's residence in Gary, where they pulled over the Lexus as it was leaving the driveway, the affidavit states.

"I was driving in East Chicago and I seen my vehicle," Brewer told one of the officers, according to the affidavit. "The vehicle pulled over and juveniles began running from the vehicle. I caught this one, but I'm trying to get him to tell me the other guys' names."

The officer then advised Brewer that he may have committed kidnapping, to which Brewer replied that he "did what he had to do," according to the affidavit.

A single bullet hole was found in the trunk of the Lexus, documents said. Brewer told the officer that "someone must have been after them while they had my vehicle," the affidavit states.

The officer also asked why Brewer had not notified the East Chicago Police Department, to which Brewer said, "I don't know where East Chicago Police Department is, but I know where Gary police are," the affidavit states.

The 14-year-old in the passenger seat was taken to the Gary Police Department, while Brewer was taken into custody later that night, according to the affidavit.

Brewer, a Democrat who holds an at-large seat, has since defended his actions during the incident. At an early October council meeting, he read a statement in which he said he undertook the search for his vehicle as a "concerned citizen" who wanted to retrieve his property.

After the meeting, Brewer said he had no comment on a resident's suggestion that he resign.

On Tuesday, Brewer won re-election to the Common Council. As president of the Gary Common Council, Brewer was paid $28,726.88, according to Indiana's Gateway website.

Gary Mayor Karen Freeman-Wilson had no comment on the charges Thursday. An arraignment for Brewer in Lake County Superior Court has not yet been scheduled, according to online records.

Indiana districts cancel classes so teachers can rally for higher pay

So many teachers asked to take Nov. 19 off to rally at the Statehouse for higher pay that nearly 30 districts across Indiana have canceled school or scheduled e-learning days.

"We're going to support our teachers," said Beech Grove Superintendent Paul Kaiser, who plans to join teachers at the rally that day while students work online from home. "I think it's important for our leaders and decision-makers to understand that this is a crisis in the state of Indiana."

The Indiana State Teachers Association and the American Federation of Teachers Indiana both plan to show up in force at the Statehouse on the ceremonial opening day of the legislative session. The unions want to urge lawmakers to find ways to increase teacher pay soon, although it remains to be seen whether legislators will be willing to act when the state's budget is already set for two years.

Indianapolis Public Schools announced Wednesday that it will cancel classes on Nov. 19 to allow teachers to participate. South Bend, the state's fifth-largest school district, and Wayne Township in Indianapolis are also among the districts that have canceled school entirely.

"We want to provide our teachers and staff with the opportunity to exercise their rights and take this day to advocate for public education and for their students," South Bend Superintendent Todd Cummings said in a tweet. The district still plans to provide meals for students who rely on school food services, the South Bend Tribune reported.

Having teachers leave the classroom to demonstrate their discontent to lawmakers is a dramatic political play. ISTA, the state's largest union, estimates the districts that have announced closures or e-learning days serve about 15% of Indiana's public school students. It expects more districts to join in.

That could make for both a sizable demonstration and a significant effect on students.

Many educators say they feel unsatisfied with the small steps state lawmakers took earlier this year to start addressing the issue of low teacher pay and don't want the legislature to wait until the next budget discussions in 2021 to take meaningful action.

"We cannot do what is right for students by sitting back any longer," ISTA President Keith Gambill said. "We have written our letters. We've sent our emails. We've placed our phone calls. Last year we had a rally on a Saturday. And the issue still exists and has not been addressed at the level that it needs to be and at the level that our children deserve."

More than 4,000 people have already registered to attend ISTA's advocacy day, Gambill said.

In 2016-17, Indiana teachers made an average salary of $50,554, according to the National Center for Education Statistics, but starting salaries can be as low as $30,000.

Not all districts are willing to close their doors for a day, which will displace students and force families to make alternative arrangements so teachers can advocate.

"We're supportive of raising awareness to legislative issues, but we're not supportive of disrupting instruction," New Albany-Floyd County schools Superintendent Brad Snyder told the News and Tribune last week. "As of today, we're business as usual. If the situation on the ground changes, and the numbers increase, we'll have to do what we can. Even with that, we'll just have to figure out a way to get coverage."

The numbers of teachers requesting time off also created a logistical snarl for some districts. In Elkhart, Concord Community Schools faced having more than 70 classrooms unstaffed because so many teachers wanted to attend the rally, WSBT reported.

"That's just too much for us to try to manage," Superintendent Tim Tahara told WSBT.

Districts that cancel school will make up the day the same way as snow days. Some are opting instead for e-learning days, when students complete classwork online, typically using computers or tablets issued by their school. E-learning days don't need to be made up, and some districts will still expect teachers to engage with students, just like when they use e-learning days in place of snow days.

ISTA is specifically calling for lawmakers to take three actions: allocate part of the state's more than $2 billion surplus to schools, pass a hold-harmless provision to protect schools from any negative consequences related to low 2019 ILEARN scores, and repeal new license requirements requiring teachers do 15 hours of professional development related to their community's workforce needs.

Lawmakers appear poised to pass hold-harmless legislation after top lawmakers publicly offered their support for the measure. The state saw test scores drop statewide in the first year of a new, more rigorous test. If approved, the one-year reprieve will allow districts to use old scores to calculate their state grades, which can factor into teacher evaluations and state takeover timelines.

But the call to use the state's surplus for education hasn't seen support from top lawmakers. When asked by Chalkbeat in September, Rep. Bob Behning, an Indianapolis Republican who chairs the House Education Committee, said in an email the state's reserves aren't meant to be a source of ongoing revenue.

"We need to look at long-term, sustainable solutions to increase teacher pay," he said.

This is the latest in an ongoing fight for higher teacher pay. More than 1,000 educators rallied at the Statehouse in March to demand higher pay and more school funding. Lawmakers ultimately approved a 2.5% increase in overall school funding and freed up $70 million in schools' pension liabilities for each of the next two years.

A committee formed by Gov. Eric Holcomb is tasked with recommending new ways to increase teacher pay, although it isn't expected to finish its report until 2021.

Indiana is so far behind neighboring states in teacher compensation that it would cost an estimated $658 million to make salaries more competitive, according to a January report.

Mixed results in referendum votes

By STEPHANIE WANG
Chalkbeat Indiana
Originally posted on Chalkbeat.org

Voters across Indiana, weighing school referendum requests from 10 districts in Tuesday's elections, approved seven measures and turned down six others.

Two affluent north suburbs in Central Indiana notched victories: Zionsville won a pair of referendums after a campaign centered on maintaining academic excellence in a growing district, and Carmel passed the state's first school safety referendum.

But other suburbs came up short. Center Grove schools failed to raise $25 million for safety features, such as live monitoring of building cameras, additional school safety officers, and more mental health supports for students.

Meanwhile, a vocal group of opponents managed to defeat two tax increase requests from Danville Community Schools, with residents rejecting both asks.

"Our community spoke decisively to not support the referenda, and we respect the outcome," Danville schools Superintendent Tracey Shafer said in an emailed statement Tuesday night. "The referenda results will make education look different in our community, but we will continue to dedicate ourselves to providing a quality education for Danville children."

In Indianapolis, Lawrence Township schools won a $191 million referendum to expand and renovate its schools.

In the past decade, Indiana districts have made more than 100 requests to voters to increase property taxes to generate more funding for schools. Prior to this election, about two-thirds of those efforts were successful, according to a state report, with cities and suburbs more likely to pass referendums than rural areas.

Districts have various reasons for requesting additional public funding: Some say they need more money to simply cover basic operational costs, and others seek to upgrade aging facilities. In recent years, some districts have also looked to referendums to fund salary increases for teachers or increase school safety amid school shooting concerns.

The State Board of Education voted 10-1 Wednesday to approved a plan that would split West Clark Community Schools — Silver Creek township would take its roughly 2,900 students and four schools while the remaining approximately 1,700 students would attend attend Henryville and/or Borden with two elementary schools and two junior-senior high schools. The issue will likely now end up on the May ballot for final approval by West Clark residents.

A southern Indiana school district successfully made its case to state education leaders on Wednesday for splitting into two — a move seemingly at odds with Indiana's decades-long push for consolidation and one that could set an important state precedent.

Nearly two years ago, leaders of West Clark Community Schools — a district with about 4,600 students, located 10 miles from the state's southern border — unanimously approved a plan that would allow a more suburban town to split from its rural neighbors.

The decision came after decades of growing animosity between the communities. Residents cheered when the board voted to separate. It was a schism spurred by anger over a failed $95 million referendum that would have gone toward improvements to Silver Creek High School in Sellersburg. The 2017 measure had support in the suburban Silver Creek township, but not in the two more rural areas of Henryville and Borden.

Since then, the district has been working to get approval from state agencies by proving the idea is financially viable, following new minimum requirements lawmakers defined last year. The State Board of Education passed the plan 10-1 on Wednesday after a brief discussion. It now goes to West Clark residents for final approval, and will likely end up on the May ballot.

Under the proposed split, Silver Creek township would take its roughly 2,900 students and four schools. The remaining West Clark district, Henryville and Borden, would have about 1,700 students in two elementary schools and two junior-senior high schools.

The district argues this would "eliminate internal competition for resources," according to its reorganization plan. Borden and Henryville schools want to dedicate more resources to vocational training, while Silver Creek wants to prioritize upgrading buildings and technology to keep up with its growing enrollment.

"I just feel like Silver Creek has greater needs than the other two have willingness to participate in," said school board president Doug Coffman, who has sat on the board for more than 20 years and represents Silver Creek.

Experts are watching this case closely because it could have implications beyond West Clark, opening the door for other districts to follow the same process. And the state board may have set a new precedent for how it handles these requests, including how much decision-making power it leaves up to local voters.

"It is critical that local voters determine whether West Clark schools reorganize," Board Chair B.J. Watts, said in an emailed statement. "When a significant change like this is considered, the best people to decide what should happen are those who live there."

West Clark's attorney Jonathan Mayes says splitting the district in two is a move to allow communities, and their voters, to "chart their own destiny."

But Rebecca Sibilia, founder of EdBuild, a nonprofit that highlights funding disparities, cautions against leaving this decision up to local communities. She said Indiana's school funding system offers an incentive for districts to try to shrink its borders to capture only voters who can or want to support a tax increase.

"It's the state's responsibility to make sure education is working for all kids," she said, "not just kids that are living in communities that can afford to resource their own schools at a high level."

Sibilia said state leaders should consider more than whether school districts' secession proposals are financially viable, but also how they will affect students.

While West Clark's proposed split is financially motivated, she noted other states have seen new secession laws allow for self-segregation by race and socioeconomics. Indiana, in outlining the process for such splits, has "opened Pandora's box," Sibilia said.

David Freitas, the only state board member who voted against West Clark's plan, said he wanted to see it give greater consideration to how students will be impacted.

Purdue University professor Larry DeBoer, who studies school referendums, said the proposed enrollment numbers for the new, independent districts fall within the ideal sizes for school systems in Indiana. Expenses rise for districts with fewer than 1,500 students or more than 6,000 students, DeBoer said. However, it could be a cause for concern if the Borden/Henryville district saw its enrollment shrink.

Enrollment at schools in Silver Creek has grown by 151 students across all grades between 2013 and 2018. In the same amount of time, schools in Henryville and Borden had 138 fewer students in 2018.

A financial review by the Department of Local Government Finance also raised concerns about the effect of declining enrollment, given that state funding is distributed on a per-student basis. The department found the reorganization will likely increase costs for the two districts, rather than make them more financially efficient, though not all budget projections could be verified.

Tensions between communities in West Clark have been building for decades, said Coffman, the school board president. The two different areas never truly became one after they were forced to consolidate by the state in the 1960s, he said. (Indiana has for decades pushed school districts to consolidate through legislative mandates and incentives to encourage efficiency.)

Four different consolidation plans failed before voters finally approved joining Borden, Henryville, and Silver Creek township into one district. Since then, each area has maintained its own elementary, middle and high school, rather than integrating students. Students weren't allowed to transfer within the district until this year, Coffman said. An attempt in the 1990s to combine high schools met swift opposition.

Farmers face a higher tax cap than regular homeowners, so when West Clark floated the referendum in 2017, residents in rural areas were likely going to pay a higher rate than those in Silver Creek. Meanwhile, if it had passed, the majority of students in those areas wouldn't go to the school that would have benefited, Silver Creek High School.

"Each community has its own DNA," Coffman said. "I think the deep-seated divisiveness doesn't come from the [school] board, it comes from community members."

Some in GOP warn against election challenge in Kentucky

By BRUCE SCHREINER

LOUISVILLE (AP) — Some Kentucky Republicans are warning Gov. Matt Bevin against challenging the election results in his re-election bid unless he finds evidence of massive fraud.

U.S. Rep. James Comer, who lost to Bevin by 83 votes in the 2015 GOP gubernatorial primary, is among Republicans suggesting Bevin may need to accept those results rather than initiate a bloody fight that could end up in the GOP-controlled legislature. Bevin trails by more than 5,000 votes to Democrat Andy Beshear, out of more than 1.4 million cast.

The comments could signal that leaders of Bevin's own party don't have the appetite to sustain a lengthy challenge.

Comer said Bevin's request for a recanvass of Tuesday's vote count is understandable. But without proof of massive fraud or irregularities, Comer warned about the signal Bevin would send by formally contesting the election, putting the outcome in the hands of lawmakers.

"If the Republicans in the (state) General Assembly tried to undo an election, that's kind of what we've been criticizing the Democrats in Washington of trying to do with this baseless impeachment inquiry," Comer said.

GOP state Rep. Jason Nemes agreed the recanvass is appropriate but said an election contest isn't appropriate without proof of enough fraud to reverse the outcome.

"You have to show, in order to overturn an election, that you have the goods," he said Thursday on WHAS-AM. "And it doesn't look like we have them."

Kentucky's Republican establishment is watching Bevin's post-election strategy closely. The businessman ran as a political outsider, losing to now-Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell in the 2014 Senate primary and winning the governorship a year later. Bevin is an ally of President Donald Trump, who made an election-eve appearance in Kentucky. But the governor's relationships with members of his own party in Kentucky have been contentious at times.

A leading GOP strategist in Kentucky said several prominent Kentucky Republicans don't want Bevin to drag out the election outcome. Instead, they want to celebrate the party's down-ballot wins and move on to 2020. The person spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the matter.

Secretary of State Alison Lundergan Grimes has scheduled a recanvass for Nov. 14 to verify the vote count.

Grimes, a Democrat, has overseen 20-plus recanvasses as secretary of state, her office said. The results never flipped a race's outcome.

Bevin has 30 days to formally contest the outcome once it's certified by the State Board of Elections. The board is scheduled to meet Nov. 21. Kentucky's last contested governor's race was in 1899.

The Associated Press has not declared a winner in Tuesday's race, in keeping with its policy not to call races close enough to go to a recount. Although Kentucky's recount law doesn't apply to a governor's election, the AP is applying that same standard here. Bevin's recourse following the recanvass would be to formally contest the election.

Bevin lagged well behind vote totals for other GOP statewide candidates. Republican candidates swept races for attorney general, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer and agriculture commissioner.

The governor's race turned into a "personality contest," Comer said, adding: "In Kentucky, it's always been my experience that people won't vote for you if they don't like you."

The other outcomes showed Kentucky remains ruby red, he said.

Meanwhile, Republican leaders of both legislative chambers acknowledged lawmakers could be asked to decide the race.

"If he (Bevin) chooses to file a formal election contest, the House Majority Caucus will handle the matter in a legal, ethical, and appropriate manner" in accordance with the Kentucky Constitution, statutes and rules of the House, House Speaker David Osborne said.

Senate President Robert Stivers said that both the recanvass and an application to contest the election would "have a very high bar to succeed." If an election challenge were to reach the legislature, the Senate would "fulfill its requirements with the upmost objectivity and impartiality," he said.

Bevin said Wednesday that his team is gathering evidence of "irregularities" in the voting. He claimed thousands of absentee ballots may have been illegally counted. Bevin also suggested that people may have been improperly turned away from polls. He offered no specifics.

He said his team is gathering affidavits, but any information turned up won't be "followed through on" until after the recanvass.

Beshear, the state's attorney general, said he's confident in the election outcome and has begun forming his transition team in preparing to become governor in December.

On Election Day, his office received 82 calls on an election fraud hotline — down significantly from general elections in 2016 and 2018.

A half million down the road

Members of the Deputy Volunteer Fire Department and representatives of the Southeastern Indiana Regional Planning Commission were all smiles Thursday night at the Jefferson County Commissioners Court meeting. They proudly displayed the enhanced representation of the $500,000 check that is going to help Deputy rebuild its firehouse and its firefighting equipment after a blaze in late 2018 destroyed the building and most of the equipment. From left are Bobby Hazelwood; Department Chief Mike Hazelwood; Mike Shelton, a former fire chief; Susan Craig, executive director of the Southeastern Indiana Regional Planning Commission; Jodi Golden, executive director of the southeastern district Office of Rural and Community Affairs, and Jenni Voris, community liaison of the commission. The money is from a grant awarded by the Office of Rural and Community Affairs, a process that was spearheaded by Craig and signed off on by the county commission. Mike Hazelwood said it will go toward putting a firehouse back in place as soon as possible. (Photo by Aaron Lux, WKMNews) Check WKMNews.com for a video of the event.

of power plant coal waste. After that use was ended, 60 feet of clay were put on top of it and the drainage pond was created, a presenter told about two dozen people who moved in small groups from presenter to presenter at Venture Out Business Center.

The team from OVEC and from engineering firms hired by OVEC looked at several options and will pursue two of them before choosing one or a combination of them. With the aid of graphics on easels, the presenters outlined the two. They are:

• Monitored natural attenuation. The pond would be drained and an engineer-designed cap would be put in place, said Tim Fulk, an engineer at OVEC. Then molybdenum remaining in groundwater near the capped pond would be addressed, he said. Natural processes would reduce the molybdenum, including the element's tendency to bond with soil and the chemistry of groundwater, he said.

This option would cost multimillions of dollars and would take a long time because it would need to be designed, permits would need to be obtained, and the plan would have to be carried out.

• Addition of pumps and treatment wells. Groundwater would be pumped up through vertical wells in the pond, put in tanks, treated, tested, then released on the ground. Among the regulatory approvals that would be needed would be from the Indiana Department of Environmental Management before the after-treatment water could be released.

When the pond is closed, its role in runoff from the drainage area would be replaced, such as by a riprap-lined ditch, Fulk said. That too would require a permit if the water is to empty into the Ohio River, he said.

Under the federal rule that OVEC is following, responsibility won't end when the pond is closed. After the work is done, monitoring well tests must show the molybdenum level is below the federal standard for three consecutive years, the visitor were told. After that, OVEC will be responsible for testing, monitoring and maintenance for 30 years. That is a requirement of the federal Coal Combustion Residuals rule.

The presenters did not have cost estimates or timelines, which will be developed later. The rule requires a public meeting like the one Thursday. The rule also says a course of action cannot be chosen until at least 30 days after the public meeting.

•Veterans

Legion members talk about the news of the day and catch up on their families and friends — with an occasional joke or tease thrown in — as music plays intermittently in the background. The TV might just carry a baseball, football or basketball game.

Despite their age differences — members range from their 20s to their 80s — and other interests, they all have something in common. It's not so much about old war stories — many vets prefer to avoid that subject entirely — but more about keeping up with each others' lives and supporting one another as friends bound by service and the common experience.

Dahlem was at the Legion Thursday with his grandson but he noted as veterans age and begin losing family and friends to the passage of time, the fellow vets at the Legion become more and more like family.

The Legion offers a place for that "family" to gather as well as a resource to help get through the tough times that some ultimately face.

Grubbs, as captain of the Honor Guard that serves at patriotic occasions and military funerals, has attended hundreds of funerals for fellow vets. He said the Legion not only supports veterans by providing the local hangout and honoring vets at funerals and other ceremonies, but also by helping secure benefits and raising awareness through the state and national Veterans Affairs Administration.

"Personally, they've done great by me," Grubbs said of the VA and its medical and support services. "I've got no complaints about them."

Others like Kimmel have felt less served by the VA. He said he's been battling for an expansion of benefits since 1998 after being exposed to Agent Orange while stationed at a Navy helicopter supply base during Vietnam. Kimmel said getting bureaucrats to recognize the health toll from Agent Orange exposure has been frustrating but knowing the American Legion is on his side is huge, and a big reason why things are slowly getting better for vets.

And while the Legion is sort of a home away from home for the veterans, they realize there are far too many jobless veterans on the street as one of the largest segments of the homeless in the nation. However, Grubbs, Dahlem and Kimmel personally think that's maybe as much choice as necessity.

They said soldiers are so highly trained in so many areas that it's hard to imagine a veteran not leaving the service with an employable skill — an opportunity to make a living and provide for themselves

Dahlem was trained as an electrician in the military and Kimmel parlayed his military experience into a job at the former Jefferson Proving Ground. All three vets said soldiers leave the military with employable skills if they want to work.

"A lot of veterans have the attitude that the government is supposed to take care of them," Grubbs said. "I don't feel like the government is supposed to take care of me. I'm not owed anything. You get a job and work."

"I think they use it as a crutch," Dahlem said. "That's the way they want to be."

"That's the way they choose to do," added Kimmel.

At the same time, Dahlem and Kimmel agreed that some vets struggle with issues that make landing and keeping a job difficult, but there are ways to work through that even though it may be a challenge, and military service trains you to be able to take on challenges.

"I think it's according to what they experienced," Kimmel said.

They said whether wounded in action, injured in training, exposed to chemicals like Agent Orange or suffering from issues like brain injury and post traumatic stress, issues facing veterans can be many and diverse and those who need help should get it and the government should help.

Kimmel said lawmakers and bureaucrats need to "do the right thing" by veterans.

Veterans Day Events

Several Veterans Day programs were late this week but there will be others locally on Monday. Here's a look at a few of them:

• Madison Consolidated High School will have a Veterans Day breakfast at 7 a.m. with a program at 8:30 a.m. The high school students will be joined by students from nearby Madison Junior High School.

• Shawe Memorial High School will have a Veterans Day Program at 9 a.m. Monday.

• Southwestern High School will have a Veterans Day program from 9 a.m. to 10 a.m. at King Gymnasium.

• The Indiana Veterans Memorial Cemetery will have a service rain or shine outside at 11 a.m. Monday. District 67 State Rep. Randy Frye and Mike Thompson, director of operations of the Indiana Department of Veterans Affairs will be guest speakers.

• Deputy Elementary will hold a Veterans day program from 2 p.m. to 3 p.m. Monday with second through fourth graders singing songs and doing readings. All veterans and community members are invited to attend.

• The Trilogy Senior Living Communities in Madison and Hanover — River Terrace Health Campus in Madison and Thornton Terrace Health Campus in Hanover — will unveil veterans walls with pictures of their veteran residents on Monday at 1:30 p.m. in Hanover and 3 p.m. in Madison. Both events are open to the public.

Veterans Day Closings

• All county and city offices will be closed on Monday.

• The City of Madison waste transfer station will be closed to observe Veterans Day. Trash, recycle and compost pickup will be delayed one day. The transfer station will re-open on Tuesday Nov. 12 at 8 a.m.

night, explaining that while there is no immediate plan, he wanted to provide numbers and contacts for the short-term. Morgan expressed concern that help be available to someone in need, but he also emphasized that it would not be good for the 911 emergency switchboard to be left fielding calls.

Madison Mayor Bob Courtney, who was out of the office Friday, but was contacted by phone by his staff, also did not know the Army was not planning to have the warming center. Courtney had his staff set up a meeting Tuesday for people from several different areas of the community to try to find a solution until the Army can re-open the warming shelter.

The invitation to the meeting said to "discuss options available to offer a warming shelter to our citizens in need this winter. The cold has arrived, and we just discovered we are not equipped to open the Salvation Army Warming Shelter yet. We hope to rally and make this a priority since we are in dire need of this shelter."

What options does that leave for people to come in from the cold?

Adams said he and other volunteers have helped three people find shelter outside the city in areas closer to where they have family. But, that was not an organized plan, he said, just an opportunity to help three people.

Major Ben McKay of the Madison Police Department said police officers have received blankets courtesy of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and are carrying those blankets in their cars. He encouraged anyone without shelter and in the cold to stop a police officer or go to police headquarters and ask for a blanket.

Historically, the Army has handled the task and received help from some area churches when the numbers were too great. But, as of Friday morning, no churches had offered shelters.

Adams noted that one of the problems is a lack of volunteer help right now because several people who have been mainstays of the Salvation Army effort have relocated or are unable to volunteer right now.

Morgan asked any organizations or groups in the community able to help to contact him and said he will work out details with them. He also will attend the Tuesday meeting at City Hall.

Rate hike denial urged

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — An Indiana agency advised regulators to deny Duke Energy's request to increase average monthly charges by as much as $23 per customer, countering that fees should instead be lowered.

Indiana's Office of Utility Consumer Counselor Bill Fine has recommended that the utility reduce its average charges by nearly $8 a month, yet another push back Indiana's largest utility was dealt since it proposed a rate increase.

Duke Energy in July asked the state Utility Regulatory Commission to approve a 15% rate increase over two years that would boost its annual revenue by about $395 million.

Consumer groups have said the company hasn't been transparent about how it determined the proposed rate increase, the Indianapolis Star reported Thursday.

Duke Energy has said it provided the necessary paperwork and disagrees with the counselor's recommendation. Duke spokeswoman Angeline Protogere said the rate cases are legal proceedings that unsurprisingly have "adversarial positions like this."

The utility said the proposed increase is to accommodate customer growth, update a grid and transition to cleaner energy.

The consumer counselor's office, Citizens Action Coalition, Sierra Club, Walmart, Kroger and other big customers have asked the IURC to order Duke to refile all its rate case paperwork and exhibits, with formulas and linked spreadsheets.

But utility regulators, who are also appointed by the governor—sided with the company, denying the motion.

FOOTBALL PLAYER OF THE YEAR

Multi-talented Barnes led Cubs on and off the field

By DAVID CAMPBELL
Courier Staff Writer
dcampbell@madisoncourier.com

There were few positive moments for 1-9 Madison football this season, but whenever one arose, chances are that Trenton Barnes was in the middle of the play, whether on offense, defense or special teams.

A rare three-way player who excelled in all three, the Madison High School junior did his best to carry a young and inexperieced team and did it all the while with a smile on his face.

"I just enjoy being able to go out and do what they need me to do," Barnes said. "Whenever they call my number, it's just fun to go out there and play football."

Barnes amassed more than 1,000 all-purpose yards this season for the Cubs and is The Madison Courier's pick for Football Player of the Year. But it wasn't just the stats that secured the honor. It was the desire to lead his team and do whatever it took to help the Cubs win a game.

"Having Trenton around was like having a seventh senior. He didn't have a ton of experience himself, but he was one of those that stepped up and said, 'I'm ready to take all of this on, give me as much as you can give me,' and that was the best part," Madison coach Leroy Wilson said. "He craved that. He loved the competition and wanted the responsibility and, ultimately, he wanted to be a leader and that shone the moment I stepped foot on this campus to today. That's the kind of kid he is."

Barnes' primary position was running back and he led the Cubs in rushing with 536 yards on 148 carries and scored three touchdowns despite missing a game.

But Barnes' name is all over the Madison stat book. He caught 21 passes for 250 yards and a score and also threw a touchdown pass on a halfback option. He came within one yard of returning a punt for a touchdown and brought an interception back to inside the 10, missing a chance to score a touchdown in five different ways.

He played safety and linebacker and lined up wide and rushed the ball on defense. He returned kicks and even got a chance to punt when starter Zach Forner was away during Madison's regional soccer run. About the only thing he didn't do was drive the team bus and he probably would have been willing to try that as well.

"I enjoy running the ball the most, so if there was one position I liked the best, it's probably running back," Barnes said with a smile. "But I love it all."

"You have that guy that other teams have to key on in a bunch of different positions. He threw a touchdown pass, he ran in a touchdown pass and he caught a touchdown pass. And he had multiple interceptions. He's just an all-around x-factor and a leader on the field," Wilson said. "And that's what you need to have. When you have a really young and inexperienced team, you've got to have those guys that you can count on and Barnesy was definitely that."

It was the leadership that Wilson's loved the most about his junior. The first-year coach made the decision to put his talented freshmen and soph-

Madison shakes off ugly start to win season opener

By DAVID CAMPBELL
Courier Staff Writer

Madison and Charlestown played what could only be described as a typical basketball season opener on Thursday, trading ugly shots and numerous turnovers over the entire 32 minutes.

In the end, it was Cubs who came out on top, 41-37, and while Madison did not play its best game, coach Sonja Bowyer was more than happy to take the win.

"I expected a little first-game jitters and the first quarter was really trying. We had a LOT of first-game jitters," Bowyer said. "But we finally settled down and got a little bit of a cushion. Last year we played ugly and lost those games. This year, we didn't do that."

Madison couldn't have started the game off any worse. The Cubs turned the ball over on six of their first seven possessions and missed a layup on the other possession.

But Madison found itself trailing by only four during that span thanks to a Charlestown squad that wasn't doing much better, with four turnovers and two missed shots of its own.

Jade Nutley finally broke the spell for the Cubs with a bucket and Madison closed the first quarter on an 11-5 run to take a two-point lead after one quarter. Although Madison's problems were far from over, the Cubs played much better over the final three periods.

"We've got some unique girls out there who can do a lot of things and I think you could see how excited they were. They were just buzzing with excitement," Bowyer said. "I love to see that, and they went out there and got it done, which I was proud to see."

Madison did not trail after the first quarter but it never put the game away either. An 8-0 run early in the second put the Cubs ahead 19-11 but Charlestown came back to pull to within four (21-17) at halftime and eventually tied the game 23-23 midway through the third.

Nutley responded with four-straight free throws and sophomore Taylor Lynch came off the bench to spark Madison with a basket to build a 29-26 lead after three quarters.

After opening the game missing five of its first nine free throws, Madison closed the night by going 10-for-11 at the line in the second half and built a 41-34 lead with a

Dolphins will be ready to face either Colts quarterback in Sunday matchup

By MICHAEL MAROT
AP Sports Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — Miami Dolphins coach Brian Flores could have written the scouting report on Jacoby Brissett or Brian Hoyer without even looking at the game tape.

He saw both up close and personal in New England and fully understands what the Dolphins will face Sunday in Indianapolis.

Funny thing is Brissett and Hoyer also recognize what they're up against, too.

"Brian Flores is an incredible coach. I've known him since my rookie year," said Hoyer, who finished last week's game after Brissett injured his left knee. "I was away from him and then I came back to see him as the defensive coordinator. I know their offensive staff and their scheme."

The Colts (5-3) have plenty at stake this week.

They have struggled to score points each of the past two weeks and their vaunted offensive line has allowed nine sacks during the same span. Penalties have proved costly and so have special team miscues. And now Indy remains uncertain if Brissett will play after spraining his medial collateral ligament in last weekend's loss at Pittsburgh , which knocked the Colts out of the AFC South lead.

"This business is brutal," Colts coach Frank Reich said. "You lose and you feel the sting of it and you feel like your back is against the wall and we have to respond."

Flores has faced the same scenario — seven times this season.

It's a stark contrast from his days of routine victory celebrations in New England, for whom he was a longtime assistant. Instead, he's running the rebuilding Dolphins (1-7) who are trying to build momentum after picking up their first win last week.

But Flores knows it will be a tough task against two quarterbacks he respects.

"I was very impressed with Jacoby and I'm not surprised at all that he's playing the way he is," Flores said before turning his attention to Hoyer. "He is as smart as they come at the quarterback position."

WELCOME TO THE CLUB

Three-time All-Pro defensive end Dwight Freeney returns to Lucas Oil Stadium on Sunday — becoming the 16th member of the Colts' Ring of Honor.

Freeney played 11 seasons in Indianapolis, becoming the franchise's career sacks leader with 107½, and was part of the Colts' 2006 Super Bowl winning team. He ranks second on the Colts' career list, behind bookend rusher Robert Mathis, now an assistant on Reich's staff.

Former general manager Bill Polian selected Freeney in the first round of the 2002 draft, when critics described the selection as a "reach." But Freeney and his trademark spin move quickly became part of Colts lore.

"What did I learn from him? I learned not to spiral into a hole when you get beat because he used to pretty much have his way with me," longtime left tackle Anthony Castonzo said. "I just thank God I never had to play against him in a game."

DEPLETED ROSTER

The Dolphins have lost four of their best players in the last two weeks.

Top cornerback Xavien Howard and leading receiver Preston Williams suffered season-ending knee injuries. Running back Kenyan Drake was traded, and his replacement, Mark Walton, begins a four-game suspension this week after a no-contest plea to a misdemeanor weapons charge last offseason.

Only two starters have played in every game this season — receiver DeVante Parker and left guard Michael Deiter.

MILESTONE MARKS

The Colts hope Freeney's induction won't be the only major milestone they hit Sunday.

They need one more victory to reach 300 in the franchise's Indianapolis era.

And kicker Adam Vinatieri needs three field goal attempts to break Morten Andersen's league record (709), eight points to become the first Colts player to score 1,500 and one extra point to become the first player in franchise history with 500.

SPUTTERING GROUND GAME

With Walton out, Kalen Ballage is expected to start Sunday. The second-year pro is averaging 2.0 yards on 35 carries this season, and Miami's average of 3.1 yards is the NFL's worst.

"I hear the stats; I know what they are," Flores said. "Everyone is involved in the run game — backs, tight ends, receivers. I can pull up 20 runs right here today where if a receiver makes a block, it's a much longer run, and that average jumps a little bit. We all have to be better."

Ballage believes he'll benefit from a bigger workload.

"I've played all right," he said. "Opportunities have been slim. Moving forward, it's about getting in there and getting a rhythm and being able to touch the ball more."

Pass interference reviews causing more confusion

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — When the yellow flag flew for defensive pass interference on Minnesota Vikings cornerback Xavier Rhodes in a recent game, coach Mike Zimmer immediately contested the call.

His newfound right to seek a replay, however, went unexercised. The email Zimmer received earlier in the day from the NFL, containing current statistics on the experimental penalty reviews, had already dashed that hope.

"They haven't overturned any, so I said, 'Screw it,'" Zimmer said after Minnesota beat Washington on Oct. 24.

None of the 11 reviews of defensive pass interference calls around the league over the first nine weeks of the season resulted in a reversal, with officials ordered to adhere to a standard of "clear and obvious visual evidence" for any overturns. There were 63 pass interference replay reviews overall, including 26 for offense and 37 for defense and 22 for calls and 41 for non-calls. Only nine resulted in a reversal.

"We are challenging things that we think are plays that are going to be overturned, and we are going to trust the process," Oakland Raiders coach Jon Gruden said. "But so far, I've been given the Heisman. I've been stiff armed. I'm 0 for 27, I think."

Exaggeration aside, Gruden has twice been denied attempts to have non-calls turned into defensive pass interference and twice trying to erase an offensive pass interference penalty. Not even the guidance of former NFL referee Gerry Austin, who worked on three Super Bowl crews and was hired by the Raiders as an officiating adviser, has been able to help Gruden get results from his red flag.

"I never get any popularity points when I say this, especially with the league, but it's an overreaction to one play," said former NFL vice president of officiating Mike Pereira, who's now a rules analyst for Fox Sports.

That play, of course, was the collision Los Angeles Rams cornerback Nickell Robey-Coleman made with New Orleans Saints wide receiver Tommylee Lewis on an incomplete pass late in the NFC championship game that went uncalled and helped send the Rams to the Super Bowl.

Even Robey-Coleman acknowledged afterward he got away with a foul, and the league's current head of officiating, Al Riveron, told Saints coach Sean Payton afterward the call should have been made. Payton's presence on the NFL competition committee influenced the offseason decision, by a landslide vote from the owners, to put pass interference up for replay review for one year, whether called or not called on the field.

There's long been a hesitance to legislate penalties like this, for fear of making games take longer. The problem so far in the view of coaches, players, analysts and fans has not been a slowdown, though, but an apparently higher standard for pass interference in the review room in New York than on fields around the league.

"I was guilty, too, in my days. You had some play that happened that just seemed totally unfair, and you changed the rule and then the unintended consequences just came flying down the highway," Pereira said. "I think we're seeing that here."

Through the first nine weeks of the season, there were 63 pass interference replay reviews initiated, 26 for an offensive foul and 37 for a defensive foul. Only nine resulted in a reversal, with five of those via challenge. The red flag has been dropped for pass interference 53 times, giving coaches a 9.4% success rate. That's a whole lot of lost timeouts.

Here's the breakdown, as provided by the NFL:

— Offensive pass interference called on the field: eight coaches challenges with no reversals, and three official-initiated reviews with two reversals.

— Offensive pass interference not called on the field: 12 coaches challenges with one reversal, and three official-initiated reviews with two reversals.

— Defensive pass interference called on the field: 10 coaches challenges with no reversals, and one official-initiated review with no reversals.

— Defensive pass interference not called on the field: 23 coaches challenges with four reversals, and three official-initiated reviews with no reversals.

The future of the rule, only enacted for 2019, is unclear. Unlike the slow-motion replays in high definition on screens around the country, of course, that put the officials on the field under constant scrutiny.

Rookie Finley gets to show what he's got

By JOE KAY
AP Sports Writer

CINCINNATI — Ryan Finley spent Sunday night watching Tom Brady get chased around by the Ravens' defense, the same one he'll face in his NFL debut with the Cincinnati Bengals.

Finley's reaction?

"I'm more worried about what we're doing," Finley said.

Smart rookie. The NFL's only winless team has enough issues of its own as it begins looking ahead to next year.

The Bengals (0-8) made a surprising move before their bye, benching Andy Dalton in favor of the fourth-round draft pick who has yet to take a snap in a regular-season game. Finley hasn't even worked out much with the starting offense that he suddenly is expected to lead.

Then there's the whole set of problems that contributed to the Bengals failing to get a win with Dalton at quarterback. A cobbled offensive line has struggled to open holes for running backs or protect the quarterback. Cincinnati ranks last in the league in rushing and has given up the seventh-most sacks.

No matter. The Bengals have decided to start looking ahead to next season by giving Finley a chance to show what he can do against the Ravens (6-2) in a daunting situation for a rookie.

Given the circumstances, expectations are low for Finley's debut.

The Ravens have the NFL's second-best run defense, which forces quarterbacks to do more than they'd like. Plus, the Bengals have allowed 29 sacks despite using tight ends as extra pass blockers. Then there's the Ravens' penchant for blitzing, which will be Finley's biggest challenge.

"It's definitely a great test for him to see what he can do, and of course we know Baltimore is going to dial up every blitz in the book, so we've just got to be ready for all of that," running back Joe Mixon said. "I'm excited for him and it will be a big week for him."

Finley got a disappointment Wednesday when receiver A.J. Green was held out of practice because his surgically repaired left ankle was sore, making it unlikely he'll be available against Baltimore.

Green hurt the ankle during the first practice of camp and was expecting to return this weekend. Coach Zac Taylor said the ankle was bothering Green after a morning walk-through, so he got treatment instead of practicing with the team in the afternoon. Green won't play until he can get through full practices without a problem.

Cincinnati also is missing John Ross, leaving the Bengals without a receiver who can present a deep threat. Finley was hoping to have Green back.

"Just having him out there changes our offense completely," Finley said. "It makes it a lot more dynamic."

There's also the question of how the players will respond to a team leader getting benched at midseason so the front office can begin looking ahead to next year.

"I don't know what it does for the locker room," cornerback Dre Kirkpatrick said Wednesday. "It's one of those things where you've just got to see how he performs. Obviously I'm not going to be 'hooraying' about Andy getting kicked out because he's a friend, been around him eight years, so I've grown to have a lot of respect for the guy."

Hanover men dominate Manchester in 2-0 win

COURIER STAFF REPORT
sports@madisoncourier.com

Hanover dominated every facet of the game and rolled to a 2-0 win over Manchester in the semifinals of the Heartland Collegiate Athletic Conference Men's Soccer Tournament Wednesday on campus.

The top-seeded Panthers outshot the Spartans 24-2, including 7-0 on goal, and held a 5-1 advantage in corner kicks. Hanover also committed only two fouls to nine by Manchester.

Despite the dominance, Hanover had trouble breaking through with a score against a squad with nothing to lose.

After repeated shots at the Spartan net, Hanover (12-5-1) finally broke through with what proved to be the game-winner in the 45th minute when Brady Gesenhues, a senior from Fort Thomas, Kentucky, took a through ball from Ian Waldrop and fired it into the net.

The Panthers picked up an insurance goal when Josh Hughes, a junior from Lafayette, Louisiana, hammered a shot from just inside the 18-yard box.

Those two goals were more than enough to post the victory with goalie Will Bedel not even needing to stop a shot in order to get the win.

The win sets up a championship today between Hanover and Rose-Hulman in three different sports. The Panthers and Fightin' Engineers will meet in Hanover at 1 p.m. to settle the men's soccer title and will square off at 1 p.m. in Terre Haute to decide the women's soccer crown. The two schools will also face off in football in a battle for that championship.

omores on the field, knowing the Cubs would take their lumps. Having a player like Barnes on the field helped soften the blow.

"There's a lot of plays where you can look back and see 27 around the ball somewhere," Wilson said. "He's not just a physical player, he's a cerebral player as well. To be able to take something from somebody like me, who's extremely detail-oriented, and to be able to pass that along to another player and have them understand that was huge. There were times where I looked at him on defense and said, 'here's the tendency, you have to know that and execute' and there were a lot of times where he did that. Having that coach on the field really helps, especially with a young team."

Barnes took it all in stride. He seized the leadership role from the start and was more than happy to help mentor the talented younger players.

"We have a lot of young guys who are going to do some great things for us in the future," Barnes said. "It was, at times, frustrating, but I understood that what having a bunch of freshmen starting could do, it was what it was. But they definitely have a chance to do some special things in the future."

The season has just ended but Barnes is already looking ahead. He plans to wrestle this year to improve his strength and will work out as much as he can. The spring brings baseball — another sport in which he excels — and more workouts. He hopes to play either football or baseball in college and will do what it takes to reach that goal.

"Looking forward, I'd really like to play either football or baseball in college. But just to improve myself for next season, I'm going to wrestle this year to get a little bit of upper body strength and quickness," Barnes said. "I need to get into the weight room and get on the field whenever I can, and do a little bit of footwork. Whatever possible to improve my game."

Wilson doesn't doubt Barnes for a second.

"I fully expect going into this offseason that he continues that in the weight room, on the wrestling mat and in baseball," the coach said. "I think he'll be able to carry that over as we get ready for next season."

minute to play. Charlestown scored three points in the final minute — all at the line — for the final margin.

Nutley, Madison's 6-foot junior all-star candidate, struggled from the floor, going just 2-for-8, but she was a perfect 8-for-8 at the free-throw line and finished with a double-double of 12 points and 12 rebounds.

Lynch and Perry each added eight points for Madison off the bench, giving the Cubs a much-needed spark in the second half.

"(Lynch is) just so smart with the basketball and a great kid. We knew she was going to help us out today, we just didn't know what aspect," Bowyer said. "We've got so many girls that can do so many different things at different times. Tonight was Taylor's night, but tomorrow could be somebody else's night. We have some weapons. As long as we can put them together, we'll be all right."

Senior Paige Young added seven points for Madison and classmate Jessie Dyer had two points and 10 rebounds.

Peyton Crace led Charlestown with 16 points and Demaria King scored seven with 10 rebounds.

Madison, now 1-0, returns to action Tuesday at Lawrenceburg. The Tigers ended Madison's season in the sectional a year ago.

A couple of years later, the company moved to its current location outside the Madison State Hospital and those clients moved with it to continue working for DSI.

Intern program open for students

Applications for the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet's Minority Internship Program spring semester are being accepted until Nov. 15, 2019. Designed for undergraduate and graduate students of Kentucky colleges and universities, this paid internship is open three times a year to a maximum of 15 interns. Interns can earn an hourly rate of up to $11.75, depending on the number of credit hours earned.

"Our goal is to provide valuable experience to students through our Minority Internship Program and empower them with skills that will aid them in their future careers," said Jamir Davis, executive director of the Office for Civil Rights and Small Business Development. "Today's young people are the future of America. We're aiming to find young talent with a diverse background to begin their careers as interns with us."

Interns will have the opportunity to work in a variety of participating offices in Frankfort, ranging from administrative work to engineering and technology fields. The Minority Internship Program includes formal mentoring, networking opportunities, hands-on work experience and exposure to transportation-related careers.

Mikeal Watson, the current program coordinator and a 2018 Minority Internship Program intern, knows first-hand the impact the program has in launching careers.

"My only knowledge of the transportation field was road work, and I had no idea that it included a broad network of individuals who are experts across multiple disciplines," said Watson. "I was grateful for the opportunity to gain real, hands-on work experience, and to be acknowledged as a valuable member of a team, not just an intern. The program is a great opportunity for students to gain insight into KYTC and to possibly venture into career paths they may not have previously considered."

Applicants with questions regarding the program can email Mikael.Watson@ky.gov or call 502-564-3601. For more information, go to https://transportation.ky.gov/Education/Pages/Minority-Internship-Program.aspx

Hanover College film show

"The Animation Show of Shows," an annual collection of the world's top animated short films will be shown Friday, Nov. 15 as part of Hanover College's Hanover Enrichment Series. The film will start at 7 p.m. in Fitzgibbon Recital Hall at the Lynn Center for Fine Arts.

For 20 years, "The Animation Show of Shows" has presented innovative short films to audiences around the world. The series has included 11 Academy Award-winning films and 38 Oscar-nominated works. This presentation at Hanover College will include 15 unique and thought-provoking animated shorts.

This year's collection offers films from six countries, including "The Green Bird," winner of a 2018 Gold Student Academy Award. Also featured is Oscar-winning director John Kahrs' "Age of Sail," part of Google's "Spotlight Stories," which chronicles an old sailor who rescues a teenaged girl.

"The Animation Show of Shows" also explores relationships through Hikari Toriumi's "Polaris" about a young polar bear leaving home for the first time, Bobby Pontillas and Andrew Chesworth's "One Small Step" about the inspiring story of a girl's dream of being an astronaut, and Trevor Jimenez's "Weekend," which explores the emotions of a boy and his recently divorced parents.

General admission tickets are free and patrons are encouraged to reserve seats online in advance at hanover.edu/arts where tickets can be printed or scanned upon entry from a barcode on a mobile phone

The Hanover Enrichment Series' "movie night" is sponsored by Tricia and Will Hagenah with additional support from German American Bank.

BRIDGE

FOR AN UNUSUAL PLAY, FIND AN UNUSUAL PLAY

Eva Green, a French actress and model, said, "It's true that I'm drawn to unusual stories. Normal roles don't really attract me."

There is a chance for an unusual play in today's deal. What happens in four hearts after West leads the diamond ace?

The auction was straightforward. When North raised one heart to two hearts, showing 12-14 support points (high-card plus short-suit points), South jumped to game, expecting to have an easy time.

West starts with his three top diamonds. What should East do on the third?

East should assume that his partner's third diamond honor is cashing. If West had started with A-K-Q-J-x-x of diamonds, surely he would have intervened over one heart. Then East should realize that if West leads another diamond at trick four, it will promote the heart king as the setting trick. But how can he transmit that message to partner?

When you need partner to find an unusual play, make an unusual play yourself. What is the weirdest discard you could make at trick three?

Right -- the club queen.

If partner thinks that is a singleton and leads a club, expecting you to ruff, you are justified in wailing like a banshee.

Finally, note that if West plays anything other than a diamond at trick four, declarer should work out the trump position because West passed as dealer. With those five shiny diamonds and the heart king, West would have opened the bidding.

Sick of being in hoarder house

Annie Lane

Dear Annie: My wife does not work outside the home. We have hired help to take care of the house cleaning and yard work. She cooks sometimes but more often she buys prepared food. She does not do my laundry. She does not pay our bills. There are not many demands on her time.

My wife is a hoarder. With a great deal of effort, I've been able to persuade her to confine her mess mostly to the rooms in the upstairs of our two-story house. Still, it is a struggle. It has been particularly frustrating to tell relatives when they visit from out of town — hers and mine — that they cannot stay with us.

From the outside, we appear to have a large beautiful home. The upstairs, however, is uninhabitable because of her hoarding. Our relatives simply do not understand why they cannot stay with us when they come to town, particularly when they can see what a beautiful home we seem to have. These relatives have hosted us as their guests in their home, and yet we tell them that we cannot reciprocate. That is embarrassing to me.

Recently, our son asked to visit us, bringing along our adorable grandchildren. They live out of state. We have been to their home many times, but our grandchildren had never visited us. Our son has not been in our home in more than six years, and he does not know the extent of my wife's hoarding. Still, I was delighted to hear they wanted to visit, and I said yes.

My wife is angry. She says I "set her up" and that I should not have agreed that my son and our grandchildren could stay with us. She is trying to make me feel bad about all this when I feel like this is her problem, not mine. I want my son and my grandchildren to visit. I hate the way our house looks because of her hoarding, but I really don't see this as my fault, and I'd rather they visit than not.

Am I missing something? — Married to a Hoarder

Dear Married: You're not missing anything. You've just got a healthy perspective on an unhealthy situation. You were right to invite your son and grandchildren to stay. To disallow houseguests would be to enable your wife's hoarding behavior.

Often hoarding occurs as a symptom of obsessive-compulsive disorder, which could be the case for your wife. Try to be compassionate and patient, and encourage her to seek professional help. Therapy could help her get to the underlying cause of the hoarding, whatever it might be. You can learn more about hoarding (including how to stage an intervention) at https://hoarding.iocdf.org.

Dear Annie: Here's a suggestion for seniors. If you live alone, please find a friend who you can email daily just to let them know that you haven't fallen or hurt yourself. A dear friend had fallen and was alone, on the floor, for three days before we went to see why she was so quiet.

It doesn't need to be anything more than "good morning" on the subject line. But at least someone knows you are OK. — Single Senior

Dear Single Senior: What a nightmare for your dear friend. Thank goodness she had people who cared enough to go check up on her. The buddy system you suggest is a valuable and potentially lifesaving idea. I'd also recommend that seniors who live alone invest in a medical alert system, such as MobileHelp, Medical Guardian or Bay Alarm Medical.

For help determining which system is best for you, see the article on aarp.org entitled "How to Choose a Medical Alert System" and speak with your doctor.

"Ask Me Anything: A Year of Advice From Dear Annie" is out now!
